

Dan Nisbet

Vice President of Development
Feeding America

DAN NISBET, Vice President of Development at Feeding America, has provided fundraising consulting and executive leadership support to human services, education, healthcare, civic, cultural, and faith-based organizations throughout the United States and internationally for nearly 18 years. Dan's areas of expertise include federated nonprofit fundraising, principal and major gift programs and strategy, nonprofit capacity building, fundraising assessments and plans, annual giving programs, and international volunteer leadership engagement.

After a ten-year career with CCS, a fundraising consulting firm, Dan joined Feeding America in 2012 where he leads its national major, planned, and strategic giving programs. Dan and his team raise funds for the national fight against hunger and work collaboratively with partners and food banks to engage more donors in the mission. Dan also led the development and execution of Feeding America's Network Fundraising Services program that provides fundraising capacity building support to Feeding America's national network of 200-member food banks to increase local fundraising infrastructure and support. Dan lives in Chicago, is a graduate of the University of Notre Dame and a member of the Association of Fundraising Professionals. He enjoys traveling, the arts, picking stocks in his Fidelity account, family, friends, and his three nephews and two nieces.
