Nick Vagelatos is the Assistant Dean for Development and Alumni Relations at NYU School of Law. Nick works alongside the Dean of the Law School, Trevor Morrison, on advancement initiatives and alumni engagement.

Nick joined the Law School's Development and Alumni Relations team in 2007 as the Campaign Manager for their record-breaking fundraising campaign, which successfully exceeded its goals of raising over $415 million and doubling the size of the annual fund. He then became the Chief of Staff to the Vice Dean for Student Services and Alumni Relations, and also served as the Law School's Director for Alumni Relations, and most recently, the Executive Director for Development and Alumni Relations. As Executive Director, he participated in the American Bar Association's annual conference panel on Major Gifts in 2016. In his current role, Nick oversees the research, major gift, and annual giving teams as well as the department's development and proposal writing. In addition, Nick is charged with leading fundraising efforts for NYU Law's Lead the Way campaign to raise $450 million. Publicly launched in 2017, this historic campaign will support the Law School's commitment to leadership and innovation in legal education, diversity and inclusion, and student success.

Prior to joining the Law School, Nick spent over six years as a political fundraiser and lobbyist. He was a finance associate for the Eliot Spitzer campaign, a finance and government affairs associate with Kasirer Consulting, and a fundraising and lobbying specialist at The Advance Group overseeing federal, state, and local political campaigns, including fundraising, compliance and marketing for a variety of U.S. Senate and Congressional clients.

Nick has a BA and MA in Politics from New York University.
